

BRAINLY

MANAGEMENT BLOG

19.04.2026

BRAINLYHQ

We want to take a moment to speak openly and honestly about where Brainly HQ currently stands. This is not a marketing post and not an attempt to pretend everything is perfect. It is simply a transparent update for the community.

The past month has been very successful for us. The economy system generated strong activity, with several thousand messages sent across the server. Engagement was high, users were active, and the numbers clearly show that people were genuinely interacting with the system. We truly appreciate that. This kind of growth only happens thanks to the community's involvement, and we do not take it for granted.

At the same time, good statistics do not automatically mean a perfect system. Over time, it became clear that the current economy lacks long-term engagement. For many users, the experience is limited to logging in, running a few commands, collecting rewards, and leaving. There is nothing broken here - but there is also not enough depth to keep people engaged for longer periods. That is a design issue, and it is our responsibility.

Another clear mistake was setting currency rewards too high. Money became too easy to earn, which reduced its value and made progression less meaningful.

An economy without balance quickly becomes predictable and uninteresting, even if it looks generous on the surface.

Because of this, we are introducing changes. One of the most important steps forward is the development of Science Scavengers. This is a long-term system focused on discovering and collecting educational items related to biology, nature, and other scientific fields. Items will have different rarities and values, and progression will be based on collection and discovery rather than simple command usage.

Access to the Science Scavengers channel will be unlocked using virtual in-server currency, not real money. The cost will be low and designed mainly to maintain structure, quality, and progression within the system.

At the same time, we are rebalancing the economy. Rewards from commands such as Work, Hustle, and Crime will be reduced. This slows down currency generation, but makes earnings more meaningful and the system healthier in the long run.

A major upcoming feature is the wallet and bank system. Money kept in a wallet will be vulnerable to robberies, while money stored in the bank will be protected.

Users will decide how much risk they are willing to take. This introduces strategy, decision-making, and real interaction instead of purely passive income.

We know that changes can raise questions and concerns, but these decisions are not made against the community. They are made to ensure that Brainly HQ remains engaging, balanced, and enjoyable over time.

Thank you for your feedback, your activity, and your trust. This project is built together with the community - and that is exactly how we want it to continue.

Signature of the Brainly HQ Board Representative:

A handwritten signature in black ink. The signature consists of a large, sweeping 'K' followed by the word 'sperix' in a cursive, lowercase font. The entire signature is written in a single, fluid stroke.

This document is protected by copyright and security codes. It is the property of the BrainlyHQ server management.

Join us: <https://discord.gg/MxrC2JmQc7>